That's in the Archives: Digging Into Archived Records

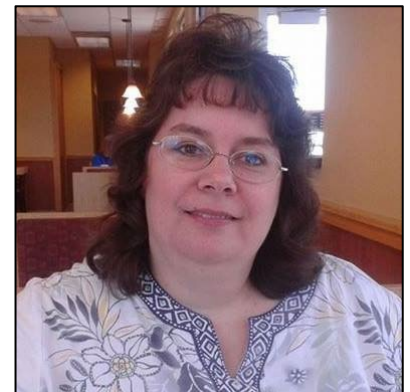

Genealogists use archives every day to locate records about their ancestors. Are there records that you are not accessing because you don't know they exist? Not all records are online, indexed, or microfilmed. Digging deeper into the local and state archives to find unique and relatively unknown records might be the next step in your genealogy research.

"Remember: It's Not All Online: Contact or Visit an Archive Today!"

-Melissa Barker

Presented by Melissa Barker

Melissa Barker is a Certified Archives Manager and Public Historian currently working at the Houston County, Tennessee Archives & Museum. She is affectionally known as The Archive Lady to the genealogy community. Melissa lectures, teaches, and writes about the genealogy research process, researching in archives and records preservation.
